“ Liz was a good friend to me and my husband. She would always show up with some small thing that was the perfect thing for us, such as a shower curtain liner with grommets. Sounds trivial, but the point is, it was pertinent to us. Liz once bought my cousin, from out of town, who she'd met twice, a little menorah. She'd gotten one for me, and thought to include him as well. That was Liz; ever thoughtful and relevant. Liz spent many, many hours with my husband and our friend Ginger gardening. The real physical work of preparing the planting beds, digging up, putting in, nurturing all the flowers and veggies. She's indelibly part of that huge undertaking.

Liz frequently showed up at our house very happy about a practically-new-designer bag, or some clothes that she found at a yard sale or thrift shop for mere dollars. And she always shared. She cared more about sharing than having things of her own.

Liz was there for me so many times when I needed someone most. She came with me to the city, to my empty coop, pre-sale, to help give it the final clean. Liz accompanied me to the vet, and then to the animal hospital when my cat had cancer. Her moral support meant more to me than all the sorries in the world. She cried with me when LC went.

Liz was an affectionate person. Always a hugger. And a people-lover.

It breaks my heart that the last months of her life were the most unpleasant. No one deserves it. And Liz in particular, who I never saw do anything but take care of other people, should have had no suffering at all. I once told my husband that Liz may be THE most polite person I ever met. I can only say that I miss her more than I would have imagined. Her cat, Beau, is living with Andy and me now. We'll love him in her stead. And always remember Liz most fondly.
